Welcome to Isuroon! Fathuma Mohamed

This is Fathuma Mohamed, Isuroon's summer intern, contributing to various projects. As a rising senior at Stanford University, She is pursuing one of the most interdisciplinary majors available, Science, Technology, and Society (STS), with a focus on Catastrophic Risks & Solutions. Her studies span multiple disciplines, including environmental sciences from a socio-cultural lens. She delves into questions such as "How does this work?" and "How have technology, society, or innovation influenced policy, risk, and resources?" Her passion lies in shaping a future where resource equity, especially for basic needs, is a reality.

Having recently started at Isuroon, She is engaged in numerous projects, gaining invaluable knowledge along the way.

"There couldn't have been a better place for my summer internship. The work I am doing here not only aids the Somali community in Minnesota but also the diverse populations we support. The experiences and insights I am gaining at Isuroon will be a significant asset in my personal and professional growth."
